Original Story Electronic Arts and BioWare are currently pursuing further legal action after a game called Elden Ring went live on Steam at 10am PST today. The game, which combines the MMO genre with the massively multiplayer role-playing genre, is, as the name implies, set in a "fantasy world of the Forgotten Realms". Players take on the role of an Elven warrior in a joint effort with the Iron Elves to prevent an alliance formed by the Serpentine and the Dwarves from conquering the land. A beta test of the game has been running for the last five weeks and the game released yesterday, despite EA issuing a cease and desist notice against it back on the 12th of October. According to a post by a user on the official Forum, the game has since been removed from the Steam's online store, although it can be downloaded from other websites such as the NCSoft website. EA have yet to comment on this situation or on whether they will take any further legal action against the game. EA and BioWare have been sent an official statement by Electronic Arts at the time of writing (please read full statement below). "We are currently investigating these reports to determine if this is in fact our product. We are deeply concerned that the unauthorized distribution of this game is interfering with our ability to conduct our business. We will provide an update as soon as we have further information
